GNUDI

REGION	REST
Tuscany around Arezzo, and Lombardy near Brescia	chilled at least 1 hour, up to 24 hours

METHOD

1. Dust a wooden board with a little 00 flour. Line a sheet pan with parchment, then dust the parchment with semolina.
2. Portion the gnudi dough into 15g pieces with a small spring scoop or a tablespoon measure, working in batches onto the board.
3. Flour both hands with 00 and roll each piece into a sphere 1 1/2 inches across. Set them on the pan in one layer and dust the pan again with semolina so they do not stick.
4. Cover with plastic wrap and refrigerate at least 1 hour, up to 24 hours.

NOTES

Piece size is 15g, rolled to a 1 1/2-inch ball, about the size of a chestnut. In Lombardy they are often made larger and called malfatti.
No sheeting, no board, no cutting tool. A spring scoop keeps the portions even, and dusted hands keep the dough from smearing.
Gnudi use their own dough, which is not one of the doughs in this collection: eggs, flour, ricotta, parmigiano, nutmeg, and greens (usually spinach, chard, or nettles) that are blanched, squeezed dry, and chopped fine. These are ravioli filling cooked without the pasta around it.
Refrigeration is a required step, not just storage. Chill at least an hour before boiling in salted water.
Served with butter and sage. Red sauce also works.
